

“COLLECTIVE SPACE” - PRESENTATION

Five different groups will present five different forms of activity, as well as the effects of their work. Cooperation-based activities themselves are not new, however, what is novel about them is their expansive and global nature obtained thanks to the Internet; the possibility of exchange, not bound by national and language borders. The structure and objectives of such groups vary – they usually jointly organise workshops and exhibitions, complete projects, support each other in publishing activities, manage common websites, and join forces to apply for co-financing of their projects. However, they adhere to a single method of operation – activity based on creative collaboration. More...
